

U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Chicago District
Offsite Mitigation Options - March 2005

There are a number of options which can be considered by a permit applicant to satisfy mitigation requirements if the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Chicago District (District) determines that offsite mitigation, rather than preferred onsite mitigation, is appropriate for a particular project,. Mitigation is normally accomplished in the same watershed where the impacts from the proposed project occur. There are two general types of offsite mitigation options which can be considered: wetland mitigation banks, and other reasonable site-specific actions that involve wetland restoration, creation and/or enhancement. The District alone has authority to determine acceptable compensatory mitigation proposals associated with permitted activities.

Wetland Mitigation Banks

Wetland mitigation banks provide wetland credits for sale and may have credits available for sale at any time. Provided below are the currently authorized banks, by watershed, including points of contact.

Other Site-Specific Projects or Actions

A final option includes projects and/or mitigation opportunities sought out by the prospective permittee. There are many resource management organizations, both government and non-government, that would welcome assistance in their own wetland restoration, creation and/or enhancement projects. The Corps will consider any reasonable proposal which can provide offsite mitigation to compensate for impacts to resource functions as a result of a permitted project.
